

do you blame me, wall?

is there a difference?

i can't say that i don't, wall, but, in a sick way, i've learned to love it.

what was it like in the trees, tree?

it was home. i imagine it wasn't too different from the walls, wall.

do you miss it?

every day.

we care about you tree. we
really do.

us, or the knot?

i know.

do you blame yourself, tree?

i'm sorry.

i know.

it's hard not to. i can't pretend i wasn't desperate to leave at first. but every pull made it tighter.

tree & wall

m.v.

why are you so upset by wall and i?

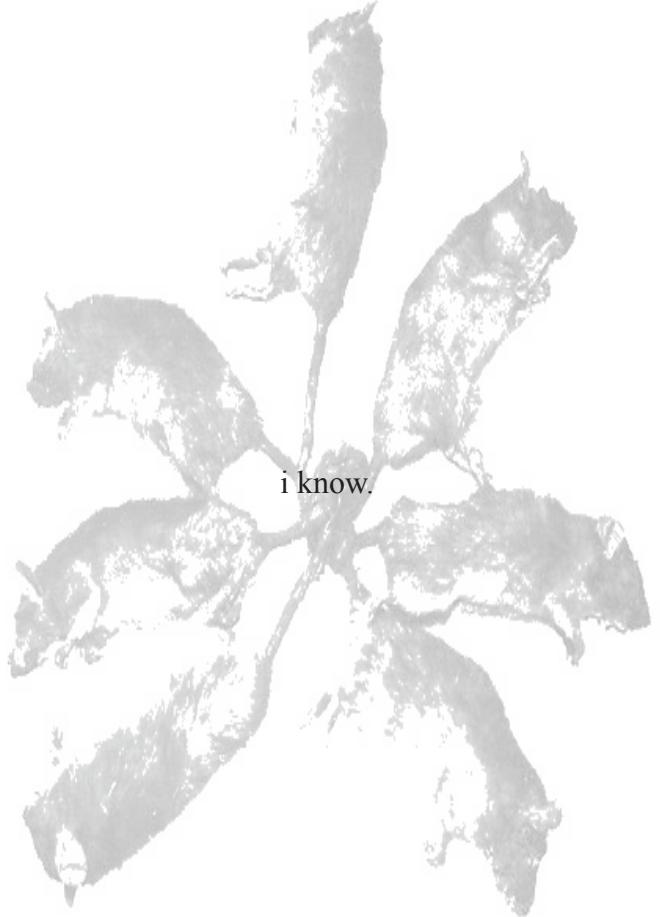

we never intend to make you uncomfortable you intend nothing, yet something always comes

the only one concerned.
do not speak of collective. you are over two?

how are we to live as one when you obsess
you are bound by the hour and the hole.

hope you die with the memory of this hatred.
at this moment. i hope you never forget it. i has amalgamated into what i feel for you leave here in hate; every shred of that hate i was born in hate, i flourish in hate, i will forget yourself. i am not here for you to fix.
i am not the person you've created to com-

i promise there will be someday.

there's nothing funny about this.

you know is anger. it's laughable.
begging someone to care about you but all you do not resent us. you are jealous. you are you make me sick to my stomach.

i resent you both.

i will die of exhaustion and frostbite
before we find a good meal.

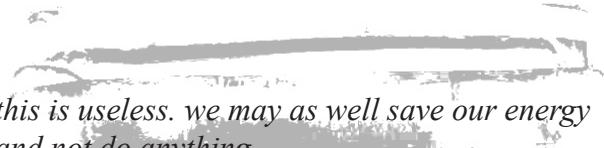

yes, but i am.

why would we be looking for food? i am not hungry.

i will die of hunger before we find adequate shelter.

where are we going?

we are looking for food.

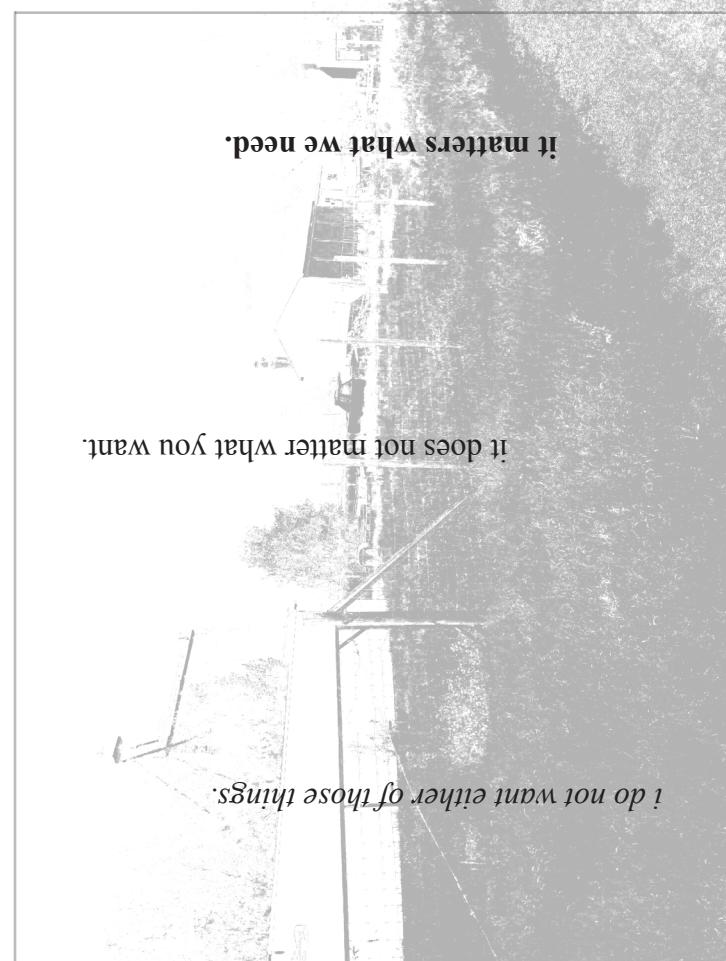

this is useless. we may as well save our energy and not do anything.

no, we are finding shelter.

this group would fall apart
without our leadership.

what a wonderful idea!

it matters what we need.

it does not matter what you want.

i do not want either of those things.

i know!
i know!
i know!

why would we need shelter, either?
i am not cold or tired.

nor am i.

yes, but i am.
